LONDON — The global price war on commercial aircraft took its toll on Airbus Industrie last year, causing the European aircraft-building consortium to post an effective loss of about $200 million, British Aerospace PLC, one of the consortium's four partners, said

British Aerospace said that despite good sales, Airbus had been hit by intense competitive pressures and, "as a result of these pressures, incurred an operating loss in 1998."

Separately, Airbus confirmed that it was holding discussions with Mitsubishi Heavy Industries Ltd. of Japan and other companies to supply parts for some of its aircraft, a move that could sharpen its competition with Boeing.

A link could help Airbus increase ales in Asia and eventually lead to Mitsubishi taking a share of the risk in developing a 600-seat jumbo jet that Airbus hopes to introduce in 2005, industry executives and analysts said.

In London, British Aerospace executives also defended their recent £7.8 billion ($12.32 billion) acquisition of Marconi Electronic Systems. John Weston, chief executive of British Aerospace, said the enlarged group's size and breadth of expertise left it well placed to play a leading role in future defense consolidation.

But Mr. Weston said he was "a little surprised" by the negative U.S. reaction to the deal, which appears to have dealt a setback to British Aerospace's hopes of finding an American partner.

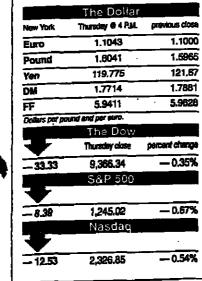

John Hamre, a U.S. deputy defense secretary, said last week the merger was "very damaging" to the prospects of trans-Atlantic defense cooperation. He also acknowledged that the deal

U.S. Senate Assails China On Human Rights Abuses

By Brian Knowlton

WASHINGTON - Amid already strained U.S.-Chinese relations, the Senate voted Thursday, 99-0, to urge President Bill Clinton to sponsor a resolution condemning China for human rights abuses when the UN Human Rights Commission meets next month in

The resolution, placed high on the Senate agenda by the majority leader, Senator Trent Lott of Mississippi, came as Secretary of State Madeleine Albright was preparing to leave for China on a visit with a long and

"It's important for our secretary of state to have that message when she goes to China," said Senator Tim Hutchinson, Republican of Arkansas. Mrs. Albright told a House committee Thursday said that she would bring to China "a strong message of support for international norms of respect for human rights," which she said would "come as no surprise to Beijing."

While acknowledging "sharp differences" with Beijing, however, she reiterated the U.S. policy that the relationship with the world's most populous country was too important to be held hostage to any single issue. And she praised China for "positive steps" against weapons proliferation and toward economic reform. Beijing had played "a responsible role during the Asia financial crisis," she said. "We need to recognize progress even as we press for more.

The bipartisan vote adds to a growing wave of international protest over Chinese rights practices. Beijing began a sharp crackdown on its political foes late last year, arresting dissidents and Roman Catholic priests, moving to crush the newly forming China Democracy Party, and blocking some Internet communications.

Senator Paul Wellstone of Minnesota, the leading Democratic sponsor, said, "The Chinese government continues to commit widespread abuses, and since the president's visit in June, has taken actions that flagrantly violate the commitments it has made to respect internationally recognized human rights." The vote is not legally binding. Last year Mr. Clinton ignored a similar call from Congress. But Mr.

Hutchinson, Mr. Wellstone and other legislators said it would make an important statement to the government in Beijing and provide comfort to dissidents. Mrs. Albright has complained frequently about Chinese rights practices. Last month she said the administration was "profoundly distressed" by the recent arrests of dissidents. She strove again Thursday, however, to paint the relationship as one too important and complicated to reduce to single issues. 'Clearly, it is a multifaceted relationship that some parts of which work and some do not," she told the House International Relations Committee. Mr. Clinton's visit to China in June was seen as a public relations success, temporarily warming the relationship. But within months, tensions were re-emerg-ing over rights issues and the steadily growing U.S. trade deficit with China, the United States's largest. Earlier this month, Taiwan charged that China had deployed more than 100 new ballistic missiles in areas close to the Taiwan strait. That followed discussion in Washington of bringing Taiwan and other parts of Asia under a U.S. missile-defense program. Mrs. Albright, asked during congressional testimony about the upcoming Geneva meeting, said that the administration had not decided whether to offer a pursue a similar resolution last year, in part because of his planned visit to China in June, and because Beijing

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration has been unable to persuade two high-profile former members of Congress to accept a nomination as ambassador to Beijing, a sign of the daunting challenge of managing the deteriorating U.S.-China relationship. It is also a sign of the weakening condition of a president in the second half of his last term. At a time when Congress is investigating China's acquisition of U.S. military secrets, questioning China's exploding trade surplus with the United States and criticizing Beijing's human rights record, the administration's overtures for the ambassadorship have been rejected by at least half a dozen candidates. Former Representative Lee Hamilton, an Indiana Democrat who retired last year after a 34-year career in Congress during which he mastered foreign affairs in general and Asia in particular, was asked to take the post, according to administration officials and friends.

But he begged off and chose, instead, to remain as hear of the Woodrow Wilson Center, a Washington policy institute. Former Senator Dale Bumpers, Mr. Clinton's longtime Arkansas friend who offered oratory in defense of the president during the Senate's impeachment trial, turned down the tentative job offer, choosing instead to

LANDECK, Austria - More than a dozen bodies were found in the snows of Alpine avalanches on Thursday, but in Austria and France rescuers were able to report unlikely success: A 4-year-old boy who had been thought clinically dead suddenly revived, and three skiers who had been trapped for nine days in a makeshift igloo 3,000 meters up were lifted to safety by helicopters after a weak signal from their fading cell phone was traced by France Telecom. After being buried in snow for two hours, the boy was dug out by a trained dog in the Austrian hamlet of Valzur. Although the boy, who was not identified, had no circulation when he was found, he was resuscitated by doctors and taken to a hospital in the town of Zams. 'When he arrived at the hospital, he even smiled a

Turkey Seeks Ban On Kurdish Party

ISTANBUL (NYT) - A senior prosecutor has asked the Constitutional Court to prevent the country's pro-Kurdish political party from participating in national elections scheduled for April.

The prosecutor, Vural Savas, has been asserting for months that the party, People's Democracy, works secretly with guerrillas loyal to Abdullah Ocalan, the rebel leader who was captured two weeks ago in Kenya and is now under heavy guard in a Turkish prison. He was allowed to see defense lawyers Thursday for the first time since his arrest. Leaders of the party have long denied that it is connected to the guerrilla movement. The case is not likely to be decided before the elections.

'No Papers' Life Brings Folding Money to Rural Migrants

EUING - Standing on a sidewalk amid a small mountain of suitcases and gifts. Wu Liuvi mentally girded herself to board the rickety. unheated bus that would deliver her. two and a half days later, to her house and preteen daughter near the southeastern city of Wenzhou.

Inside, two tiers of reclining seats already were crammed with the blankets, coats and food of three dozen other passengers heading home for Chinese New Year.

Miss Wu, who owns a small leather workshop in Beijing, seemed illsuited for the journey in a blue blazer and black heels. But ever since she and her husband left their farming village in Zhejiang Province for fac-tory work in Beijing in 1992, this daunting pilgrimage from the place where they live to a distant "home" has become a family routine,

"What can you do?" she said, herding her 7-year-old son to the bus. "I have to see my daughter, and I'm taking my son home to start school

China is on the move these days, with an estimated 10 percent of the population now migrating from their official place of residence, mostly in search of better jobs. Legions of young Chinese are moving one step up the job chain: Those from tiny villages move to small cities, and those from small cities move to larger ones.

But rural migrants such as Miss Wu remain outsiders in the city, with little hope of securing the coveted urban residence permits that would allow them to build an entirely legal life in rural towns, they remain off the books in cities such as Beijing, where hous-ing, education and other social ben-efits are mostly state-controlled. Thus, they are not eligible for most good jobs or housing subsidies, pay steep prices to enroll children in the few public schools that admit them, and cannot even register a car or bicycle.

The government allows relatively few Chinese to change their official residence each year, and most of these are well-educated people moving for government jobs or marriage.

Significant numbers of Chinese have been leaving their villages only since 1984, when the government eased somewhat its residency system. allowing people to travel for temporary jobs. The trend has snowballed in recent years for a variety of reasons, clutching hammers around construction sites and women selling snacks at street stands. They are a vast new pool of cheap labor that has allowed urban factories to prosper.

Most of the migrants are between 18 and 35 and have a junior-high education. They tend to work at unskilled, low-wage jobs in the private sector. Their movements have helped fuel economic growth in recent years, as businesses and unskilled laborers have become increasingly willing and able to follow market demands.

The changes have made it much easier for us to hire people from across the country, and that has allowed us to expand our business," said Joseph Chen, the owner of a button factory in Qiaotou on the outskirts of Wenzhou.

Job agencies have spring up to channel labor across this vast nation, but word-of-mouth often guides the flow. Xu Bin, who works in a badge factory in Wenzhou, said he had got-ten his job through an employment agency in Boyang, his hometown in

*Five years ago, a few people from my town came, and now a lot more have followed," he said. "Everyone at home knows that this area has developed quickly.

Luo Lichun, who was tending vats of dye at another Qiaotou button factory, said she would have been unemployed in her poor farming town in Sichuan Province. "A friend came home and told me there was good work here," she said, "so I came."

In the city, the migrants often do piecework in small factories, working more than 12 hours a day. They live together in the backs of workshops, small apartments or spare dormitories. One study of a migrant community in Beijing estimated the average living space at less than 2.1 square meters (2½ square yards) per person.
Many migrants said living conditions were far better at home. For most, the goal is simply to earn money to take home, in part because they retain strong ties to their villages and in part because of the residence-permit problems. But they also seek job experience and adventure.

'I work seven days a week,' said Li Fenglian, from Sichuan Province, as she prepared to venture out from her workshop into the streets of Beijing. "But I came because it was a new opportunity to see the world."

HE PRESENCE OF the migrant workers is transforming urban life, mixing distinct re-gional cultures but also giving rise to a rootless underclass.

Chinese cities have been strained by the massive influx and the social troubles it is supposed to have spawned: more crime, beggars and cases of sexually transmitted disease. In the early 1990s, Beijing tried repeatedly to expel the residents of "Zhejiang Village," a chaotic jumble of workshops and stalls in south Beijing where most migrants from the Wenzhou area, including Miss Wu, live. But each time, leather workshops, day-care centers and pungent markets selling dried shrimp, yellow wine and other Wenzhou delicacies popped back up within months.

Today, the government seems to have made peace with the city-withina-city that has become home to 100,000 people.

'They're figuring out ways to administer it rather than suppress it." said Dai Jianzhong, a sociologist at the Beijing Academy of Social Sciences. "Through licenses and rent, the area generates a lot of income for

New Political Reality in Capital: The Sensational Is Merely Old Hat

By John F. Harris Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - President Bill Clinton, in a news conference that reflected the bizarre atmosphere in Washington, fielded questions for 51 minutes with his visitor, President Jerry Rawlings of Ghana, in a session that at times seemed almost farcically unscripted.

In the first question Wednesday, the president was asked if he wished to respond to news reports about an Arkansas woman accusing him of sexual as-

The exchanges between Mr. Clinton and the press corps offered some vivid glimpses into Washington political reality in the wake of the impeachment drama. What once would have been a sensational event — a president being quizzed about lurid sexual allegations has become somehow nearly old hat after a year of the Lewinsky scandal.

Mr. Clinton curtly referred Helen Thomas of United Press International, the dean of the White House press corps, to a statement from his lawyer when she asked, obliquely, about the allegations NBC of an interview with the woman, leveled recently by an Arkansas nursing who alleged that she was assaulted by home owner. Juanita Broaddrick. She alleged that he forced her to have sex in a botel room in 1978.

The day also showed how quickly Mr. Clinton's agenda, at least as measured by the questions he receives, has returned to a source who was present at the interview Saturday at ABC's Manhattan studios. The interview will be shown on ABC's 20/20" program on Wednesday.

The former White House intern was described as candid, direct and at times emotional and teary-eyed, part of a compelling performance that persuaded ABC executives to expand the "20/20" broadcast to two hours. The source provided a detailed reconstruction that stopped short of a verbatim account.

Meanwhile, an emotional Juanita Broaddrick told her story on national television for the first time Wednesday night. She did not tell authorities 21 years ago of her contention that Bill Clinton sexually assaulted her because, that this was not the person she was in she said, "I didn't think anyone would believe me in the world.'

Senators Advised to Avoid Haste on Counsel Law

By Lizette Alvarez New York Times Service

WASHINGTON --- With the Senate apparently poised either to scrap or strip pack the independent counsel law, Howard Baker, a former Republican Senate majority leader, has counseled senators to take a post-impeachment cooling-off period and delay the decision until next year.

"I recommend to the Senate and this committee that we cool it, think about it for a while, let the temper of these times soften," Mr. Baker told the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs, which had its first day of hearings on the law on

Closure for the Tomb of the Unknowns

By Steven Lee Myers New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - With science now outpacing military tradition, the Pentagon has concluded that it will not place new remains from the Vietnam War in the Tomb of the Unknowns at Arlington National Cemetery, according to senior officials. Nine months after remains were removed from the tomb jection in Huntsville, Texas. Norman and identified as those of First Lieutenant Michael Blassie, the Evans Green, 38, was the seventh person officials said that scientific advances, including genetic tests, had all but eliminated the chance that any remains recovered from the war would not be identified. The Pentagon's conclusion signals the end of a military rite that dates in the United States to the Civil War, when 2,011 unknown soldiers were honored by a granite tomb at Arlington. The cemetery, which is in Virginia, faces Washington across the Potomac River.

With the Pentagon now taking DNA samples from everyone who joins the military, there is little chance that future wars will produce unidentifiable remains. No other crypts are likely to join those at the tomb honoring unidentified soldiers who died in World War I, World War II and the Korean

"We really don't have another candidate for the tomb," Rudy De Leon, undersecretary of defense for personnel, said. Potentially, all the remains are identifiable.

William Cohen, the secretary of defense, oversees the Tomb of the Unknowns and has not decided on its fate. But he is expected in the weeks ahead to choose what to do with the now empty crypt that for 14 years held the remains of Lieutenant Blassie.

Veterans' groups and organizations representing the families of the missing have submitted a number of proposals. One idea, from the National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia, would involve installing a plaque near the tomb inscribed, "In honor of those still missing, this crypt remains forever empty." Another proposal suggests writing "In memory of" on the white marble tablet that covers the crypt.

'We'll handle this in a dignified way that provides some closure," said the Pentagon spokesman, Kenneth Bacon, adding that Mr. Cohen agreed that no new remains would be placed in the tomb. "We need to find some fitting and proper way to honor' those who died in Vietnam, he said.

At Arlington, little has changed outwardly at the tomb. After Lieutenant Blassie's remains were removed, workers sealed the crypt and replaced the marble tablet, which is marked with the years of U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia,

To the side, a sign on the tomb's history has been updated with a paragraph about the Blassie case. "The crypt is presently empty," it concludes, "but it serves as a tribute to all those who made the supreme sacrifice during the Vietnam Conflict." There are still 2,069 Americans missing from the Vietnam War, and about 200 sets of bones, teeth and other remains await identification at an army laboratory in Hawaii.

WASHINGTON - The Supreme Court has sharply limited the First Amendment rights of illegal immigrants, ruling that people here unlaw-fully cannot shield themselves from deportation by claiming the government is trying to banish them simply because of their political views. The 6-to-3 decision Wednesday strikes at the heart of the American tradition of safeguarding free speech and offers one of the court's strongest opinions limiting the constitutional freedoms of illegal immigrants. But for the government, it is an important victory in its effort to keep those who have no legal right to be here from evading deportation on extraneous grounds.

The two-pronged decision also forbids illegal immigrants from trying to fend off deportation through federal courts until they already have exhausted every other administrative immigration procedure. ton's request over six years.

Immigration experts said the ruling was unlikely to affect most of the thousands of people subject to deportation annually because few claim they are being targeted for their political views. But immigrant advocates said it could intimidate immigrants and make them afraid to speak out about any political matter for fear of drawing attention to their illegal status.

The case also marks a departure from a general court trend of bestowing on illegal immigrants the same due process of law and other constitutional freedoms granted to American citizens. Dissenting justices pointed to a speeding the deportation of illegal ali- 1945 court ruling that said, "Freedom ens, many of whom have managed to of speech and of press is accorded changed the military and for Democrats to show that they, too, support better pay and more benefits for the armed forces. But the bill drew budgetary objections from the Clinton administration, which had proposed a less costly pay-and-benefits package, and prompted warnings from lawmakers of both parties that it could wind up squeezing other programs or eroding the fiscal discipline that helped end decades of budget deficits.

Even as the military compensation bill was being debated Wednesday in the Senate, Republicans including the House speaker. Dennis Hastert of Illinois, and the majority whip, Tom DeLay of Texas, indicated that spending caps approved as part of the big 1997 budget deal may have to be raised, in part because of increased military spending.

The Senate majority leader, Trent Lott, Republican of Mississippi, has said he wants to avoid any breach of budget caps, although other senators have said this may be difficult in light of mounting pressures for increased domestic and military spending. The 91-to-8 vote in favor of the pay-and-benefits bill in the Senate gives the legislation a powerful head of steam as it moves to the House, where similar leg-islation is on track for consideration this spring, probably in connection with the defense authorization bill for 2000. The bill would authorize, subject to future appropriations, a 4.8 percent military pay raise starting Jan. 1, with an-

London Police Vow to Hunt Racist Killers

LONDON - London's police chief vowed Thursday to spend his remaining 10 months in office trying to bring the killers of a black youth to justice after an official report accused his force of incompetence and racism.

Sir Paul Condon, London's Metropolitan Police commissioner, told BBC radio he would make use of "whatever offense we can utilize legally" to bring charges against those responsible for the death of Stephen Lawrence, who was stabbed to death in 1993 while waiting for a bus in southeast London.

"I want the racist thugs to feel hunted," said Sir Paul, who is due to retire at the end of this year. The Lawrence case has focused the attention of Britons on attitudes to minority groups within the police ser-The report published Wednesday attacked the police for their investigation into Mr. Lawrence's murder, speaking of "a combination of professional incom-

"If they don't respond satisfactorily, I propose to give them seven days, and after that we would then take the matter to court," Mr. Khan said.

Violations in Kosovo inconclusive finish to the Kosovo peace talks in France this week, it is easy to forget that a Kosovo deal already exists. It was negotiated by the special ambassador Richard Holbrooke last October. It was accepted by the Serbian leader Slobodan Milosevic. And it was, ostensibly, to be enforced by NATO.

Now Mr. Milosevic is in gross violation of that deal. The agreement allowed him to keep far too many troops in Kosovo, but he has exceeded even that limit by thousands of special police. He was supposed to keep his troops in garrison, but they have been roaming freely through the country-side. Mr. Milosevic promised a ceasefire, but as, U.S. Ambassador William Walker, chief of the civilian verification team in Kosovo, said on Wednesday, "The cease-fire is a bit of a joke." The Serbian dictator promised to release the ethnic Albanians he had detained, but more than 1,500 of them remain in custody, without charges and subject to torture and other abuse. 'It's a short list." The American ambassador also observed that "both sides are totally out of compliance," but that is not quite true. The Kosovo rebels cannot be out of compliance, because they were never included in the October negotiations, nor asked to sign any document. They were informed about Ambassador Holbrooke's talks with Mr. Mi-

With all the attention paid to the losevic; they were asked to abide by a cease-fire. Their provocations certainly are unhelpful and their attacks on civilians inexcusable, but they are not in violation. The Serbian forces are in violation.

Senator Chuck Hagel, Republican of Nebraska, asked Secretary of State Madeleine Albright on Wednesday how serious Serbian violations would have to be before NATO responded, as it has threatened to do so many times. "Well, we are — we have is-sued various warnings," she replied in testimony to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. "NATO, Secretary-General Solana, I believe, did again yesterday, and I believe will

No doubt he will. But issuing warnings is a sad substitute for policy. The United States government has been issuing warnings since 1992, when President George Bush warned Mr. Milosevic not to wage war against the independence-minded province of Kosovo, and the lesson Mr. Milosevic has drawn thus far is that he need not pay such warnings much mind.

All this is relevant to those inconclusive talks in France, where the Kosovo delegation surprised U.S. mediators by rejecting, until the very last minute, their proposed deal. Mrs. Albright did well to rescue something from the talks, and in coming weeks Kosovo officials may (and should) sign on to the idea of three years of autonomy without independence. But it should come as no surprise that some Kosovo fighters are reluctant to lay down their arms in exchange for a promise of NATO and American protection. They can see, all around them, how much such promises have been worth so far.

Economic Growth Requires Good Governance

By Kim Dae Jung and James. D. Wolfensohn

SEOUL — This Friday and Satur-day, Nobel Prize winners, former heads of state, representatives of civil society and preminent academics gather for a conference in Scoul on "Democracy, Market Economy and Development." The goal will be to start a long-overdue discussion on the effects of governance on economic growth. The reason for the conference should be obvious.

Let us begin with a personal note. One of us fought a lifetime for democracy before becoming president of his country. The other, as president of . the World Bank, is committed to the fight against poverty.

As president of Korea, my overriding goal is the political, economic and social health of my country.

As president of the World Bank, my job is to help create a world in which there are fewer hungry children, where economic growth is expanded and made more stable, and where development is driven by the people it is intended to help.

What brings us together in this conference is the shared goal of under-standing better what conditions precipitate and enhance economic growth. We have had opportunity to talk in the past year about what happened in East Asia, as well as in other parts of the world. We talked at length about our ideas, and our ambitions, for building a global economy open to all people These discussions have been enormously fruitful, and we are now trying to widen the range of ideas.

We started with what we got right.

We have known for years that widely shared economic growth depends on a range of factors. Governments must make investments in basic health care strong anti-corruption policies.

and education within the context of sound economic policies, strengthened infrastructure, safer air and water, and modern technologies to convey and share knowledge. These principles were at the heart of the remarkable economic success that East Asia achieved in the past decades. Multilateral institutions do much to support these programs by assisting governments with a comprehensive approach to development, generating partnerships and broadening the exchange of ideas and experiences.

But, as we have seen in East Asia in the last 18 months, this is not enough:

Effective, accessible public institutions are a necessary condition for stable growth.

Development is about more than the right policies; even about more than good social investments. Development, in short, requires good gov-emance, meaning open, transparent, accountable public institutions.

In a market economy, growth, if it is to be lasting, must be regulated — not overregulated, but guided by public institutions and private professional conduct which establish a foundation of transparency and fairness in economic life. There is no substitute for this transparency. This means accessible courts effective bankruptcy laws, sound securities and competition regimes, and

We have, thankfully, moved beyond stale debates about whether government is good or bad for market economies. All agree that effective, accessible public institutions are not just conducive to but a necessary condition for stable growth.

Governments, therefore, must contime to reform. But not just governments. Principles of integrity and accountability are equally important for the private sector. The argument that dynamic growth requires a sacrifice in transparency and accountability has, at long last, been buried. Free markets cannot work behind closed doors.

Markets will place great pressure on the private sector to reform, A prominent investment bank, for example, recently highlighted corporate governance as a primary factor in its investment recommendations in East Asia; and Standard and Poors is increasing its focus on corporate governance practices when issuing debt ratings for corpo-rations as well as countries.

In a world market that pivots on the speed and perceived credibility of information, journalists must be free to uncover market information, both good and had, and stock exchanges must be able to provide data instantaneously. Governments and business must work together to ensure that such information is available.

The Seoul conference comes at a propitions time. First, we have in East Asia a unique opportunity to fix the problems we know need fixing. This window will not be open forever. The promising indications of recovery we are seeing are a testament to the hard work of Koreans and of other people throughout the region. But we have much more work to do.

We must not let this opportunity slip, nor should we allow a return to positive growth to tempt us into forgetting the fundamental institutional reforms so necessary to ensuring good governance and transparency.
Second, the world is watching what we do here. We can set the tone for what a future global marketplace will look like. As world leaders prepare to draft a global financial and economic architecture, we must step forward and insist upon a shared set of principles that will provide the ground rules for that marketplace.

No country can have reforms or practices imposed externally. It does not work. Korea will differ from India which will differ from Australia. But surely we can agree that transparency in financial markets is central; that court systems should be open and accessible to all people; that credit and financial services should be available

The global economy must, in short, be open to all people if it is to endure. We must have confidence in the integrity of markets and the probity of those who run them, in both the public and private sector.

Finally, people are demanding change. Financial crises are really human crises. Politicians can no longer ignore the manifest urgency of building economic development in parallel with an environment of social and human instice. This has profound implications. People simply will not support a world economy which is exclusively about growth rates and private capital flows. It must be about more than that. International Herald Tribune:

Washington's past carelessness in licensing satellite sales to China may have damaged America's security. This week the Clinton administration drew the right lessons from its mistakes. It denied Hughes Space and Communications approval to sell a mobile communications satellite to a company closely tied to the Chinese military. As the Pentagon reasonably feared, the satellite sale could have improved the reach of Chinese military communications in Asia and helped China refine its rocket technology. Washington should encourage American civilian commerce with China. But it must tightly control advanced military technology. China is not a global military rival of the United States as the Soviet Union was during the Cold War. But Beijing has its own military agenda that sometimes conflicts with that of the United States. Military cooperation with China should not extend to satellites or the rocket boosters used to lift them into orbit.

Hughes wanted to sell its satellite to a private business consortium in Singapore. But the Pentagon learned that top officials of that consortium were

PARIS — From the mouth of Madeleine Albright at Rambouillet, the United States sounds very tough and determined to lead a coalition of muscular power. The secretary of state more or less took over the last round of talks about Kosovo, and while the "ultimate deadline" for either agreement or NATO bombing was put off once more, she did seem to force progress toward a compromise settlement. To hear leading Republican strategists, the Clinton administration is going too far out on a limb and will not be able to sustain congressional and public support for its interventionist, shape-up-the-world ideas.

To hear editors, academics, politicians, Americans are not interested in foreign news and do not want to be involved in foreign quarrels, like Kosovo. Parents of American teenagers say they worry that interventionism will lead to sending more and more troops abroad and to renewal of conscription. The signals are completely mixed. For the French, the United States has become the "hyper-power" determined to tell everybody else what to do. Ironically, France has moved from the traditional Gaullist insistence on independence and going its own way as the best counter to what it fears as American hegemony to a new insistence on multilateralism. It is an admission that it takes conscious group pressure to keep American power cooperative. France can't block it alone.

By Flora Lewis

There is a remarkable gap between the role that America seems to seek in the world, when it talks of leadership and a new "strategic concept" for NATO to meet assorted global challenges, and how Americans see themselves. The end of the Cold War has not brought any clear idea of what to do now.

A curious Defense Department announcement indicates that some people are trying to think up ways to simplify attitudes once again and mobilize patriotic urges. Starting on April 5, the U.S. Army will take applications for a certificate stating that "in recognition of your service during the period of the Cold War (Sept. 2, 1945, to Dec. 26, 1991) in promoting peace and stability for this Nation, the people of this Nation are forever grateful." From 18 to 22 million members of U.S. armed forces in that period and an unestimated number of federal civilian employees are eligible, the announcement said, although it foresaw that only about a million would ask for the document.

The date given starting the Cold War immediately after the end of World War II and a brief, strangely distorted history of the confrontation add to the peculiar impression. A call to the Pentagon's office of public affairs to ask whose idea this was and why it is suddenly proposed now produced only increasingly irritated repetition of the announcement, and the charge that the questions were "hostile." So the explanation can only be speculative. The armed services are all concerned about a lack of recruits that is leaving of enlistment standards. But the reason is obviously nearly full employment, not lost dreams of glory that a certificate might revive.

ships shorthanded and units un-

There are signs of nostalgia for what, in fuzzy memory, seems to be Cold War unity of purpose and support for the military. It is intriguing to wonder what the authors of this idea (the certificates will be signed by Defense Secretary William Cohen) thought they would achieve, but it is evident that the Pentagon feels it is losing connection with civil society.

The Clinton administration has proposed a considerable increase in military spending over the next five years. Right-wing dermanned, forcing a reduction Republicans are demanding even more. But the arguments made are a combination of porkbarrel benefits for various congressional constituencies and exotic notions such as "cataclysmic terrorism" and strategic missile defense not the pay raises and readiness support that the military really wants.

There simply is not much basis for saying "here is what the United States intends to do" these days. Or rather there is some basis for a whole series of contradictory descriptions, from imperial diktat to utter disinterest. Not unless there is some huge new challenge, much worse than anything on the current horizon, are foreign affairs and U.S. relations with others likely to be a major issue in the next election campaign.

Americans are not all that sure about what they want to be and what they are prepared to do for it. If the Pentagon's Cold War summary is reflective, the past is already a big blur and the present is a puzzle. In these circumstances, America's partners can have more influence than they suppose, if they do know the kind of world they want to see.

Think It Through and Then Explain

WASHINGTON — Long neglected in America governance is the presidential demonstration of wide-ranging competence. That executive reach used to be displayed at the once formal news conference. Reporters ask some 20 questions; the president, who has prepared answers for four times that many, fields them adroitly. To prepare for "question time," as parliamentarians call it, a president's entire administration is forced to make foreign and domestic policy decisions. This discipline creates agonized; late-night sessions throughout the bureaucracy. That is the serious business By William Safire of running the country. But since he burdened the nation with the Lewinsky affair, Mr. Clinton has been in relative seclusion; the last formal East Room news conference was 10 months ago. He had excuses. His lawyers would not let him; the press corps would focus on the scandal. But because his hibernation from access coincided with a rise in his job approval rating, the tradition of regular questioning has been called into question.

Another useful tool for governing well has been all but abandoned: the thoughtful speech. Not the hourlong State of the Union blockbuster that touches on everything and deals with nothing. Not the fourminute radio spot that urges reduced class sizes.

Missing are the serious addresses that get little coverage but show that the administration has an economic philosophy or an intellectual framework for its foreign policy.

Whoops! I just used the dread "I" word. But reviving the national radio address, recalling FDR's usage, was my baby back in the campaign of 1968. As the press was rolling its eyes at the Nixon stump speech, we astounded eggheaded critics with a weekly series of substantive, 20-minute radio speeches. Drove 'em batty, having to slog through philosophical rumination trying to find a lead.

But such mental ferment and internal debate help the man at the top figure out where he wants to take the nation. Mr. Clinton, the reputed policy wonk, is presumably capable of this. On Kosovo, Americans do not need a nibble about NATO solidarity, or four minutes of dire warnings about rubbery deadlines. We need someone to explain which lessons drawn from Bosnia apply to Serbia. What is our military role in a

Europe no longer faced with a Soviet threat? What does America expect from NATO outside Europe? When does a confirmed multilateralist go it alone? What sacrifices in blood and treasure are we prepared to make to help Palestinians and Kurds and Kosovars and African tribes achieve - what? Independence? Autonomy? Unity? Are all civil wars intolerable?

Maybe sober analysis would be met with a national yawn, or comes too late for the present White House residents as they devise their excunt strategies. But we can hope that future presidents will restore the traditions of answering and ex-plicating that will help them think more deeply and govern more effectively.

Ocalan, however, we are witnessing a spectacular change of mood and attitude. After all these long years, the country is suddenly awash with the hope that it might be able to solve the one problem that has been hampering our development for so long. There is a new self-confidence and excitement in the air.

People who previously held altogether opposed views on how to deal with the problem are now coming together. There is a widespread feeling of a new page being turned in Turkish history, of a chance for a completely new start. Even the most militant among Turks, those who held out for a total military solution, are now voicing sentiment that it is time to change.

The immediate matter on everyone's mind is that Mr. Ocalan be tried in a manner that will be deemed fair in international circles. Public opinion is very sensitive on this issue. People are excited about being able finally to prove to the world that the old charges against Turkey have not been true, that despite its many shortcomings Turkey operates in a just and legal manner.

The second challenge facing Turkey is how it will tackle the Kurdish problem. Everyone now seems to understand that the task at hand

Ocalan represents a tremendous blow for the PKK, it does not automatically spell the end of the resistance movement. But it is believed that if the country goes into action now it will be able to free itself from the swamp in which it has been stuck for so long. To do this it must quickly set into motion a number of cultural, social and economic reforms and must be willing to pass in short order a law granting some sort of amnesty to those living in the mountains or wasting in prisons who have not been guilty of heinous crimes. The restrictive laws that are part of the State of Emergency Act must be relaxed.

It was not long ago that mere discussion of such steps provoked long debate. Many believed that such actions, taken before PKK terror had been brought under control, would be a sign of weakness or capitulation. This attitude is now changing.

A broad consensus is forming. It encompasses the military, political hard-liners. members of the press corps and even ordinary citizens who have lost relatives to PKK terror. Turks hope that a cleaning of the slate can solve the Kurdish problem. This is the biggest challenge facing the country.

Kennedy often said, referring to the power of economic growth. Republicans have often cited his words in their recent push for a 10 percent across-the-board cut in the U.S. income tax. Much to their surprise, however, voters have been cool to their idea, which has been portrayed as a tax cut for the rich, and party leaders seem to be backing off.

Why haven't Americans relogic? A rising tide is a strong metaphor, but an honest economist will tell you that growth is not always so beneficent. In Mr. Kennedy's time, a lack of formal education was no obstacle to getting a good job. A farm laborer. displaced by mechanization, could get on a bus to a city and find a factory job at higher pay.

Today, the economy heavily favors the better educated. Now,

This is not the time to make income inequality worse. Few economists believe a large tax cut is the best use of the budget surplus. Monitoring Food Aid

Regarding the editorial "North Korean Challenge" (Feb. 16):

The allegations that food aid is diverted to the army and party cadres in North Korea are at odds with the World Food Program's experience in distributing food there. The World Food Program carefully monitors the distribution of its food aid in North Korea, both upon arrival in the ports and at the institutions through which assistance is provided.

We premise our aid upon access to North Korea's counties for monitoring purposes; if we do not get access to a county, it does not get our food.

This monitoring has shown that our food aid reaches the intended beneficiaries: children aged from six months to 10 years, pregnant women, nursing mothers and hospital patients. Under our current operation, we are feeding about 6 million people.

The food commodities we provide -- chiefly maize and wheat — are of no interest to members of the army or ruling elite. They prefer rice, and they have prime access to it.

In any humanitarian operation, there will be some minor losses or diversions, but it is misleading to suggest that in North Korea significant amounts of food are going unaccounted for.

A failure to resolve the decades-old demand for Kurdish self-determination risks encouraging fundamentalism and separatism throughout the region, as well as territorial conquests by countries anxious to control "terrorism" and water resources.

Alas, Mr. Kaplan is wrong in suggesting that the Kurdish question may supplant the Arab-Israeli conflict. On present form, the Palestinians, like the Kurds, will still be subject to occupation and their lands to settlement by their neighbors. To that must be added the threat of economic, and possibly political, disruption in the Gulf as oil prices continue to stagnate.

The debate in the Philippines on the application of the death penalty centered on capital punishment as a deterrent. No effort should be spared to effectively punish crime and protect public safety, while also rehabilitating criminals. There is no need to put anvone to death. The increasing crime rate is nothing but a mani-festation of the breakdown of moral values. A concerted effort by parents, schools, the government, religious communities and the mass media is needed to reconstruct the moral base of society. ROSE CATACUTAN.

A Horror Beyond Bearing, While Once Crowds Came

of justice this week when one of the white supremacists who dragged Mr. Byrd to death behind a pickup truck was found guilty of first-degree murder in Jasper, Texas. Mr. Byrd had been beaten. But the prosecution showed that he was alive when John William

King and two other men chained him to the bumper and raced three miles along a logging trail and a blacktop road.

During the dragging, Mr. Byrd turned over and over to relieve the pain as his flesh was torn away and nis skeleton was ground up on the blacktop. He finally died a mile and a half out, when the truck took a sudden turn and his head and arm were severed by a metal culvert.

These facts are beyond bearing for anyone with an ounce of human feeling. But the salutary lesson of this case is that what Americans deem acceptable can change dramatically from one period to the next. What virtually everyone views as barbaric today was regarded as commonplace and even as acceptable entertainment a half-century ago. Lynching, for example, began during Reconstruction as a method for intimidating former slaves who were attempting to vote and ex-ercise their human rights. Nearly 4.000 Americans were lynched from 1880 to 1930, according to the records center at the Tuskegee Institute in Alabama - many of them burned, tortured, mutilated or dragged, like Mr. Byrd. The victims were often affluent men and women who had competed with and angered the white establishment. The main actors were usually people like John William King, aimless young men in their teens and 20s, marginal to society, with anger to burn. The bloody work they performed was often attended by crowds who came for entertainment.

The lynchings peaked in 1892. when 161 of them took place, or nearly one every other day. Among the victims that year were three young Memphis businessmen who had apparently generated enmity among their white years. Fifteen human beings have been burned to death in different parts of the country by mobs. Men, women and children have all gone to see the sight, and all have approved the barbarous deeds done in the high light of Christianity.

Through work like this, Miss Wells rallied anti-lynching sentiment. But of tens of thousands of lynchers and watchers, only 49 were indicted and only four sentenced to jail up to 1930. The courts, the police and even the local clergy adopted an attitude of silent acquiescence.

The only solace in the Jasper affair is that a town and a country that would once have viewed this death as unremarkable have been repelled by it.

Weimar Dons the Mantle of Europe's Capital of Culture

By Richard Covington

EIMAR, Germany -Facing off like identical twins, a pair of two-story houses, crisscrossed with latticework trellises, stare across at one another in Weimar's rolling castle park. According to Gabriele Gerecke, one of the organizers of Weimar as the European Čity of Culture for 1999, Goethe's authentic garden house and its re-created double are a deconstructionist puzzle.

How does the aura of the copy differ from the original, she mused? As if two houses were not enough, the replica also contains a virtual-reality simulation of the great philosopher's summer retreat. Visitors can compare the auras of all three." quipped Gerecke with a remark-

Under the generous pa-tronage of Karl August, duke of Saxe-Weimar, and his widowed mother Anna Amalia, Goethe turned his house on the Frauenplan into an ongoing salon where he entertained and was entertained by Hegel, Thackeray, Mendelssohn and Madame de Stael among other European cultural lights.

'Noble be man, caring and good," was his credo and no one better exemplified it than the polymathic Goethe himself, the naturalist, philosopher, poet and playwright who took time out from his day job as privy councillor and from his inexhaustibly eclectic research to give scientific instruction to a handful of privileged students.

Zen and the Art of Household Maintenance

By Kaori Shoji

OKYO — To young Tokyo urbanites "home" used to be a dirty word. It represented all the things they wanted to escape from: dreariness, cluttered confusion and boring housework. The less time spent there the better, and people did everything they could to avoid it. In fact, according to consumer research polls, this was largely the reason why Japanese put in so much overtime.

The manufacturers of household products sought to rectify the situation. They released one nifty, time-saving electronic gadget after another and decorated them with pictures of flowers and cute animals. The idea was that consumers could buy into the decor as well as the function, and this would ultimately cheer up the household. Sadly, the ploy only enhanced the tastelessness and floral electronics added to the long list of all that was wrong with the Japanese home. Whenever cartoon artists drew a depressed housewife they drew her alongside an electric water pot, patterned with pastel flowers.

Then in 1980, "Mujirushi Ryohin" (All Value, No Frills) was launched by the Seibu conglomerate in a mighty effort to change the urban home.

"Muji," as it is affectionately called, is defined by two things: the streamlined simplicity of the individual product and the sheer number and diversity of the product range. Everything from baby wipes and tricycles to flatware and furniture, cosmetics and business suits to packaged, precooked food is stylishly arranged on plain purchase.

HAPPINESS

Directed by Todd Solonds. U.S. The first sly joke in Todd Solondz's blistering and brilliant satire of Ozzie and Harriet's American dream is the flagrant irony of its title. The name "Happiness" may not represent truth in advertising, but who would go to see a movie called "Rancor, Denial, Spite and Self-Loathing"? In the excoriatingly comic second offering from the writer and director of "Welcome to the Dollhouse." emotions such as glee and contentment are in short supply on screen; and the only Joy you'll find is in the name of one of the film's central characters, a loveless 30-year-old loser played with gentle melancholy by the wondrous Jane Adams. It has also retained, unforrunately, a bit too much of the drama's talkiness, although Drazan and Rabe have done wonders to open up the action, moving some of the conversation out into the streets of L.A., where the protagonists chat by cell phone from adjacent cars or drive from one end of the parking lot to another to avoid walking 50 feet. In fairness, these are the folks - casting agents and struggling actors — who schmooze for a living, and they do so in a town where tortured introspection is a sacrament, so perhaps the glib gab-fest is not that unusual. As the quartet of impeccable actors endlessly yammer with each other and abuse and pass around their long-suffering women (Robin Wright Penn, Anna Paquin and Meg Ryan), they come across like a club of overgrown boys who have lost the decoder rings that would enable first moments, when we first meet Joy, she has just broken up with a poor themselves. By Debra A. Klein INGAPORE — As we chugged into Buran Channel's deep waters in Singapore, industrial craft from Panama and South Korea bobbed in the bright blue-green waves. As far as we could see, commercial vessels - some long and black, others stout and gray — were moored in a watery parking lot, awaiting their next route across the Strait of Singapore.

It was our last afternoon in Asia and after two weeks touring at break-neck speed, my husband and I were finally ready to get away — from our vacation. So we headed for sacred Kusu Island, a tiny dot of land about three and a half miles (six kilometers) from the skyscrapers of downtown Singapore, but a world away from the crowds.

Trade Center Pier on Singapore's southern tip. The island is holy to Taoists and Muslims, who make pilgrimages there sleek Tua Pekong Temple — dedicated during the ninth lunar month (usually October or November) to leave offerings at a Chinese temple and Malay shrine.

On most other days the tiny island is practically deserted, and it is an ideal place to unwind for a half day. About 20 minutes out of Singapore's harbor, a sliver of land came into view. The tree trunks of slender Lazarus Island lined up in perfect size order, creating an islet on the horizon that we could actually see straight through. On the near side, the water was bright turquoise and beach was a slit of powdery white sand.

Today, there are two turtle three sides to the tempting sea. ponds on the island to honor those legends — the large lagoon that runs under the Taoist temple, and a small cement "tortoise shelter" closer to the shore.

> A SERENE TEMPLE We were the only visitors at the Tua Pekong temple, which was clean, highly polished and quiet except for the rustle of leaves.

Despite its remote tropical location, Tua Pekong still displayed the ornate cement turtles were marooned in the flat carvings and glittering ceilings of a lagoon water. They were symbols of temple in the heart of town. Red banners hung behind gold lanterns in airy pavilions. Ornate dragons raced across the pitched roofs. Elaborate offerings burned at the feet of symbolic carved figures hidden on altars in the shadows

We meandered through the curved green and red doorway to the rear of the Indonesian island, and over the choppy temple and continued onto the thin path and up the stairs to the Muslim kramat, or hermit's shrine, on the hill.

The bright treehouse-like shrine was, like the rest of "our" island, deserted. The only signs of life were spent candles releasing final smoky wisps into the dead, breezeless air. Green Muslim crescents and stars marked white and yellow pillars, but otherwise most of the walls and surfaces were bare. A small sign explained that the hill was sacred to Muslims, and that it was dedicated to Sahed Abdul Rahman, a 19th-century Malaysian whose family had mysteriously disappeared.

We walked a loop past odd yellow picket-fenced enclosures, and waist-high inner square. From the shrine we had a clear view to the gray outline of a nearby blue waters of the strait.

Debunking the Myth of Monolith

By Roger Collis ual Herald Tribuni

NOW thyself is the lapidary advice on the temple of Apollo at Delphi. In present day travel terms, that means deciding what kind of traveler you are for a particular trip. Travel decisions depend on a shifting equation of cost, conveni-ence and comfort. We travel in different modes, different frames of mind, with different needs, motivations, priorities and prejudices, depending on why we're going and where we're headed.

Business travelers are not monolithic as the travel trade often assumes. Corporate travelers have expense accounts, but some have deeper pockets than others and are subject to travel policies reflecting status and company cultures. Individual and small-business travelers, for whom travel expenses are their bottom line, have different needs and priorities. As do female travelers who may have their own needs, concerns and priorities.

The lodging industry seems more aware than airlines of our diversity, our shifting needs, providing more choice and flexibility - recognizing that we may not only want to trade up or down between deluxe and budget hotels, but trading across as well, from serviced apartments to small, town-house hotels.

Major airlines are reporting lower yields, reflecting a downgrading from first and business class to economy, because they've got their branding (and pricing) out of sync with the emerging needs of business travelers; reading what they want to read from the self-fulfilling findings of consumer surveys. Changes will be driven by the traveler.

continues to attract large numbers of European travelers — especially from Britain — prompting dramatic fare increases. While they have leveled off in the last quarter, business-class fares have risen by a staggering 24 percent over the past two years. Business-class fares from Britain are 25 to 30 percent higher than from cities in Continental Europe. "The growing difference between premium and economy fares -- especially for long-haul journeys — is putting pressure on business travelers to move to the back of the cabin," Davis says. After a recovery in the third quarter, hotel rates in Seoul fell again, contribcent, while Tokyo and Beijing had modest decreases of just over 3 percent.

Western Europe saw an increase in first-class hotel rates of 1 percent compared with previous increases of 7 percent over the last eight quarters. Overall, tourist-class rates have fallen by 4 percent in the last two years. Corporate rates in Paris have risen by 16 percent and 14 percent in London in two years.

Boeing Vows Self-Discipline to Try to Rebound From Loss

By Laurence Zuckerman New York Times Service

NEW YORK - After 18 tumultuous months during which it posted its first annual loss in 50 years and saw its stock price dive, Boeing Co. has promised to impose strict self-discipline and says its two top executives will get no bonuses. Speaking to Wall Street analysts in Orlando, Florida, on Wednesday, Philip Condit, the chairman and chief executive, said that Boeing, the world's largest aerospace company and the single-largest American exporter, was reviewing all of its operations in a relentless effort to increase profits. Any program that did not measure up would either be dropped or sold.

"Nothing escapes scrutiny here," he said later in a conference call with re-porters. "There are no sacred cows." A preliminary assessment done by the company found that about 10 percent of its $13 billion in equity had been Philip Condit, the chairman, says, further $2 billion is invested in op-"There are no sacred cows." erations that merely break even. The

the most profitable companies in the Standard & Poor's 500 stock index.

Deborah Hopkins, Boeing's new chief financial officer, who was hired from General Motors Corp. late last year to try to introduce some financial discipline, said the company would fix or eliminate its "value-destroying" operations and maximize the returns on those that hovered near profitability.

'This isn't a program of the month or a flavor of the month;" she said during the same conference call. "This is the way we are going to run the business at Boeing. Forever.

That tough talk could translate into some wrenching decisions for Boeing, such as canceling the slow-selling new 100-seat 717 passenger jet that it in-berited when it bought McDonnell

Douglas Corp. in 1997.
It could also heighten tensions with the International Association of Mainvested in unprofitable operations. A chinists, Boeing's largest union, as the two sides approach contract negotiations this year. Included in Boeing's nell Douglas who is now Boeing's pres-equity was making a better return than makes more sense to continue producing components itself or to buy them a hot-button issue for the union.

And it also raises questions-whether Boeing, which was catapulted to its current prominence in large part by daring that nearly sank the company before becoming one of its biggest successes, will ever be able to take the same kind of high-stakes risks that have characterized the commercial aerospace industry since World War II.

Mr. Condit has been talking about increasing shareholder value at Boeing for years. His credibility with Wall Street was stretched to the breaking point last year after his assurances that things were improving repeatedly turned into additional quarterly charges and a steady decline in the company's profit targets.

Boeing's 1998 performance was so poor — its stock declined 32 percent that Mr. Condit and Harry Stonecipher, the former chief executive at McDon-good news was that 25 percent of the review will be a decision on whether it ident, will not receive annual bonuses, Mr. Condit said.

Analysts who attended the meeting welcomed Boeing's latest moves, although they said they were long overdue and short on specifics. "It is amazing that we are at this point and they are only now figuring out how to drop the losers and keep the winners," said Nicholas Heymann, an aerospace analyst with maintenance.

Prudential Securities. Howard Rubel, an analyst at Gold-man, Sachs, said, "There is no reason why there won't be a certain amount of cynicism by investors partially because can't

Besides improving its current operations and selling off some units, such as its commercial helicopter unit, Boeing has revived the idea of expanding into aerospace services such as airplane

"There are 10,683 Boeing jets flying around the world," Ms. Hopkins said. 'The question is: What are we doing to capture our fair share of that services market? And the answer today is: Not enough.' She said that expanding into services such as overhauling jets for airlines would create new jobs that could counter cuts in other parts of the company.

But it may also cause some diplomatic problems for the company because many of its largest airline customers are also competing in the services arena. Mr. Condit said he was profit margins are expected to range aware of the problem but thought there between 3.5 percent and 5 percent next were enough opportunities for Boeing year, compared with an estimate of 4 to steer clear of its customers.

Telecom Fights New Olivetti Bid

Executive Is Said to Quit In Dispute Over Strategy

Under new rules on corporate takeovers, the board will need approval from holders of 30 percent of Telecom a stock if Mr. Bernabe wants to go ahead. It could call a special shareholders' meeting to get that consent.

Telecom Italia shares fell in a generally weak market as Olivetti's decision not to raise its bid, though widely anticipated, took the froth off prices that had surged above Olivetti's offer of 10 euros ($11) a share made Wednesday. Telecom closed down 4 percent at 6.27 euros, while Olivetil slid 6.9 percent to 2.74 after unveiling further details of the financing for the bid. In its first reaction to the renewed offer, Consob asked Olivetti to provide details of the sale of its interests in the cell-phone firm Omnitel and the fixedline Infostrada company to its German parmer, Mannesmann AG. The deal, signed Wednesday and expected to raise more than $8 billion, is conditional on Olivetti's bid succeeding. (Reuters, Bloomberg)

South Korea Documents Its Rebound

On President's Anniversary, Statistics Show Jump in Production and Sales

By Don Kirk International Herald Tribune

SEOUL - On the first anniversary of the inauguration of the reform-minded Kim Dae Jung as South Korea's president, the government re-warded itself Thursday with a variety of upbeat statistics portraying the nation's economy as being on the mend. Industrial production was 14.7 percent higher last month than in January 1998, the National Statistical Office said. At the same time, it said, retail sales increased 2.8 percent year-on-year --- the first such jump since before November 1997, when the country appealed to the International Monetary Fund to piece together a rescue package of nearly $60 billion. The economy has embarked on an expansionary cycle," said Song Keum Young, an official in the gov-ernment's National Statistical

A range of other statistics indicated the economy had hit bottom and was on the upswing. One telltale sign was a government report that investment in new machinery, needed to build the products that South Korea exports to the world, should rise 8.8 percent after dropping 34 percent

Michel Camdessus, managing director of the International Monetary Fund, captured the upbeat mood in a talk Wednesday in New

Less than three months ago the Fund predicted a 1 percent drop in South Korean economic growth, he said, "but the people of Korea were so courageous, and the program worked so well, that we have already had to correct our forecast" to a 2 percent increase for the year.

Some analysts, however, see the possibility of a relapse if big businesses do not move faster toward reform.

Lawrence Summers, the visiting U.S. deputy secretary of the Treasury, warned government and business leaders Thursday against "complacency" that he said could "put a brake on necessary restructuring" of the nation's Excluding the 685 million euros ($753.5 million) in takeover costs, profit rose 29 percent as sales of Mercedes-Benz and Chrysler passenger cars and Airbus planes rose. But final net income fell to 4.8 billion euros from 6.5 billion euros a year earlier. Profit before the extraordinary costs rose to 5.20 billion euros from a pro-forma 4.06 billion euros in 1997.

Endesa's Bid For Enersis Is Stymied

MADRID - Endesa SA's shares fell Thursday after Spain's largest power company lost a bid to control Enersis SA, Chile's biggest utility holding company.

Enersis shareholders blocked a $1.5 billion offer late Wednesday that would have let Endesa double its 32 percent stake. The shareholders refused to increase the maximum amount an investor can own in Enersis, dashing Endesa's hopes of taking over Enersis to make it the vehicle for its Latin American expansion.

"We were surprised by the out-come of the vote," said Ramon Olleros, a fund manager at AB Asesores, a brokerage in Madrid. "It's very bad news for Endesa."

Changing the bylaws was the last resort in Endesa's 18-month fight for control of Enersis, a company valued at $3.5 billion that owns power companies in Chile, Argentina, Brazil, Peru and Colombia.

Endesa has poured $1.3 billion into Enersis since September 1997 to gain control, only to be foiled by opposition from Enersis executives and small shareholders that own part of Enersis. Because the bylaw change had faltered by just a small margin, some analysts in Madrid predicted that Spain's leading utility would not give up the battle yet. The company is expected to keep its Enersis stake. It would lose money if it sold now because Enersis shares have plunged 30 percent since

Endesa bought the stake as the recession in Asia and currency turmoil spread to markets in Latin America. Endesa's shares closed at 23.82

euros ($26,20), down 1.10 euros. ■ Telefonica's Bill in Brazil

Telefonica SA said it expected to make provisions of 119.37 billion pesetas ($786.5 million) this year to cover its investments in Brazil, news agencies reported from Madrid.

The former state-controlled monopoly purchased key parts of Telecomunicacoes Brasileiras SA, or Telebras, the Brazilian telephone monopoly.

companies failing to make substantial service improvements would not have their operating franchises renewed. In contrast, those that did improve quality would have their contracts extended.

Deputy Prime Minister John Prescott said that he would subject operators to "tough" new performance contracts. The companies would be fined for failing to meet these targets, he said. "If you want it, we can have a running battle," Mr. Prescott told industry bosses. But I don't want that. I believe you don't want it either."

Of an Early Accord BONN --- European Union lead-

EU Discounts Hope

ers sought Thursday to damp expectations they would reach an accord Friday on overhauling financing, regional aid and farm policies. As negotiations over cuts in the EU's costly farm-support programs headed for a fifth day, German Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder portraved the summit meeting in Bonn as little more than a first exchange of views on revamping the 15-nation bloc's budget of 85 billion euros ($93.5 billion). He urged other leaders to limit public statements to generalities so as not to spoil the talks. The goal, he said in a letter, "isn't to make final decisions but to discuss possible options and compromises as part of an overall package."

Germany, the holder of the EU's rotating presidency, said its new I I-nation currency, the euro, would slide further unless the EU reached an agreement by its self-imposed budget deadline of the end of March.

Very briefly:

• Gap Inc.'s profit rose 46 percent, to $313.9 million, in its fourth quarter, which ended Jan. 30, as demand for khaki pants and sweaters at its Old Navy stores helped the U.S. clothing chain record one of the strongest sales gains among retailers during the holiday season.

• J.C. Penney Co.'s fourth-quarter net income rose to $207 million, or 77 cents a share, from $201 million, or 76 cents a share, a year earlier, although revenue fell 4.5 percent, to $9.32 billion, on slow clothing sales during the holiday season.

• Waste Management Inc.'s earnings before charges rose sharply to $361.1 million in the fourth quarter on rising revenue and savings from its merger with USA Waste Services Inc.

• Clear Channel Communications Inc., a U.S. owner of radio stations, said it would buy a 33 percent stake in Golden Rose Communications PLC to gain entry into the British market. • Philip Morris Inc. will close its cigarette plant in Louisville, Kentucky, by the end of next year and cut 1,400 jobs. • Cornerstone Properties Inc., one of the largest owners of downtown office buildings in the United States, said property acquisitions and higher rents drove earnings from operations up 65 percent, to $43.3 million, in the fourth quarter.

CBS Chief Talks of Buying NBC

NEW YORK — The chief executive of CBS Corp., Mel Karmazin, said Thursday his company would interested in buying the NBC network if the government eased rules that prevent one company from owning two broadcast television networks. He said NBC would be a better fit with CBS than with General Electric Co., NBC's parent.

Mr. Karmazin said he believed GE would either spin off NBC as a separate public company or sell it. NBC is facing problems with declining ratings and profit and rising costs. (AP, Bloomberg) kets.

By Japan Helps Yen

NEW YORK — The dollar fell against other major currencies Thursday as Japan signaled it would not print more currency to help end its recession.

"The market is now doubting the idea that gripped it so forcefully a few weeks ago that Japan was going to reflate" the economy, said

FOREIGN EXCHANGE

Lawrence Hatheway, the global chief of strategy at Warburg Dillon

He added that expectations Japan might follow a reflationary path drove the dollar to more than 120 yen last week, and as that expec-tation fades and U.S. financial assets drop on concern that interest rates will rise, the dollar could lose further ground.

The U.S. currency was quoted at 119.775 yen in 4 P.M. trading, down from 121.670 yen Wednesday. The euro, meanwhile, was at $1.1043, up from $1.1000 Wednesday. In other trading, the dollar was at 1.4390 Swiss francs, down from 1.4462 francs. The pound was at $1.6041, up from $1.5965. The Japanese finance minister.

Kiichi Miyazawa, said Japan would not support proposals, including one from the United States, to bolster the economy by printing more money.

The yen also was supported by a report from the Ministry of Finance that Japanese investors were net sellers of foreign securities in January for the first time since last March. Investors and companies in Japan are repatriating profits from abroad to bolster their earnings before the March 31 fiscal year-end.

"There's a pattern of selling from change at Erste Bank.

The euro fell briefly against the dollar after an unexpected increase in U.S. factory orders in January fueled expectations for stronger U.S. growth and higher interest rates. But the reports turned into a negative for the U.S. currency when stocks and bonds declined on fears of a rate increase. "People will be looking to the long end of the fixed-income market and to the stock market for clues as to the direction of the dollar," said Jamie Coleman, a senior currency analyst at Thomson Global Mar-

Assurance IBM Devises Remedy for Pentium Security Fears

IBM has come up with what it believes is a way to satisfy consumers concerned about a security feature in the Pentium III computers: It will ship the computers with the controversial feature hidden by the computer's hardware.

The security feature is a built-in serial number in Intel Corp.'s new Pentium III microprocessor. Intel has responded to protests by offering a specific software program, known as a utility program, to pre-vent the number from being read by other software. IBM's remedy goes further and hides the number at the hardware level, which is harder to penetrate.

IBM made the announcement Wednesday in a letter to the Center for Democracy and Technology, a Washington-based privacy group that has asked the nation's major computer makers to provide more security than is offered by Intel's software remedy.

Intel announced the processor digital dossiers on people.

Responding to the growing threat of digital music piracy via the In-ternet, Sony Corp. planned to pro-pose a new copy protection scheme Thursday.

The plan is designed to enable the recording industry to sell music safely, both on-line and on digital formats like CDs and andio DVDs.

The proposal is the first to be submitted to an industry standards group, the Secure Digital Music Ini-tiative, which was established in January by the Recording Industry Association of America. The new scheme consists of two separate copy protection systems.

Magicgate and OpenMG, both of which require special hardware sysfore they are sold and unscrambling them for listeners.

Magicgate will embed a special chip in each recorder and playback

OpenMG, which is intended for personal computers and related devices, will require that consumers purchase a hardware device known as a dongle, which will attach to a personal computer's serial port.

The dongle will ensure that an encrypted music file be copied by an approved digital recording device before it can be played.

Sony said it had also developed a third copy-protection system known tems for scrambling music files betended to be a long-term solution to the business problems presented by copy-protection schemes. Such an approach might permit a consumer to listen to an unlimited amount of music for a single subscription fee. A spokeswomen for the recording institute said Wednesday that the standards group planned to meet Friday in Hollywood and that 90 companies had expressed an interest in joining the initiative. She said the group expected other proposals besides the Sony plan.

available in the next several years, are aimed at grabbing a share of the $11 billion that Americans now spend each year for glasses and contact lenses.

While doctors and analysts are wary of predicting how popular vision-corrective implants will become — they will cost as much as $2,500 an eye, and they involve surgery—their development is a result of the recognition that many aging baby boomers are eager to spend lots of money to turn back the effects of time.

The excitement last year over Viagra, Pfizer Inc.'s impotency pill, showed that there was an increasing demand among the middle-aged for medical treatments that could make their lives easier and more fulfilling.

Many analysts say consumers may snap up implants be-cause they increasingly are becoming frustrated with contact

After expanding for years, the contact-lens market in the United States is barely growing. The number of wearers of annual-replacement soft contact leases, 36 percent of the market, fell 7.9 percent last year. The only boom is for daily disposable soft contacts, with sales up 44 percent last year.

"Intacs should have a broad appeal," said Katherine Martinelli, an analyst with S.G. Cowen Securities Corp. "People won't have to worry about cleaning or replacing them. One of the keys is that the products are going to have to be able to work in a broad range of people.

But the potential seen in implants comes with a number of

Given the companies' small size (Keravision had only $835,000 in sales last year), analysts worry that the companies lack the resources to make their products best sellers.

Even after an advisory panel of the Food and Drug Administration recommended Intacs for approval last month, shares of Keravision, based in Fremont, California, continue to trade below their July 1995 initial offering price of $13.50. The shares were trading Thursday afternoon at $12.50, up 43.75 cents on the day.

Possible side effects and complications range from blurred vision with Intacs to a slim risk of cataracts with the Staar Surgical lens.

The implants are expensive, and only 2,000 people have Intacs, made of a clear polymer that is used to correct cataracts, are two arcs that are inserted surgically in the periphery of the cornea. The arcs flatten the cornea to correct vision primarily between 20/40 and 20/300, a treatment that could be used by nearly one-third of the 70 million Americans who suffer from propries.

could be used by nearly one-third of the 70 million Americans who suffer from myopia.

The surgery takes about 10 minutes and requires a local anesthesia administered through eyedrops.

Insertion of Staar Surgical's intraocular contact lens, made of a bendable polymer, takes about 20 minutes. Like Intacs, the lens can be inserted in a ophthalmologist's office under local anesthesia, but the procedure is slightly more invasive. The contact lens fits just over the eye's natural lens behind the iris.

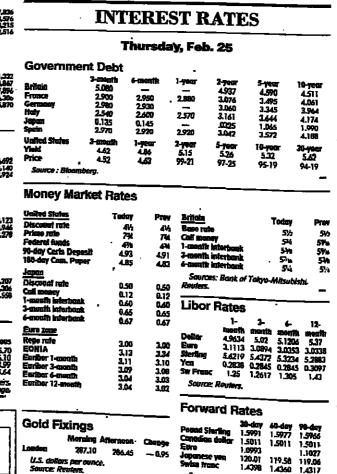

Though several years away from market, Bausch & Lomb is developing a lens that fits in front of the iris, a position that doctors say should reduce the risk of cataracts. The device has two thin Z-shaped arms with tiny foot plates to help hold it in place.

Doctors say there is a slightly greater risk of infection from the leas procedures, but their uses are far broader. Intacs primarily correct mild nearsightedness, while the implanted lenses have proven effective in early clinical trials as a remedy for a greater range of myopia and farsightedness.

With both procedures, the implants can be easily removed. In the Intacs trials, when the lenses were removed, the patient's evesight went back to its uncorrected vision in most cases.

eyesight went back to its uncorrected vision in most cases. But not all wearers of such implants may be thrilled with the devices. Given the cost of the procedure, side effects, while minor, may prove a deterrent.

WASHINGTON — It has been a long, long fall and a harsh winter for stockholders of Iridium World Communications Ltd., the company based in Washington that has launched a network of satellites that can provide mobile phone service anywhere in the world.

Subscribers cannot make those calls unless they have Iridium phones, however, and the company is suffering from a shortage of phones that has delayed the recruitment of subscribers and exacerbated a drop in the stock that has cost investors more than $6 billion.

In a little more than nine months, Iridium shares have fallen from more than $72 to $28.56 at the close of Wednesday trading on the Nasdag Stock Market.

reassure investors that the company's setbacks are only temporary.

The shortage of phones is a particular embarrassment because most of them are being made by Motorola Inc., the biggest portable phone maker in the United States. Motorola dreamed up the Iridium system and is one of its three big investors, along with Sprint Corp. and Lockheed Martin Corp.

Analysts say the shortage of phones means Iridium will not meet its goal of having 27,000 in use by the end of March and will fall short of its targeted 88,000 phones at the end of the first quarter and 173,000 by the end of the third.

Journalists, explorers, globe-trotting business executives, disaster relief workers and government officials are obvious target markets. But are there the millions of customers who will be needed for Iridium to make money? Analysts insist there are.

Yankees and Nets Plan Merged Entity

The New York Yankees and the New Jersey Nets of the NBA have signed a letter of intent to merge the two teams into one company. The teams' current management will remain in place, with George Stein-brenner running the Yankees and Lewis Katz running the Nets, the teams announced Thursday.

The deal, which creates a holding company called YankeeNets, will enable the Yankees to gain better leverage in selling their local broadcast rights. Their $486 million 12-wear contract with Cable lion, 12-year contract with Cable-vision Systems Corp.'s Madison Square Garden Network expires after the 2000 season. With the Yankees and Nets united, the company will have 12-month program-

On the field and on the court, the accord is not expected to change anything. The deal is also subject to the approval of owners in Major League Baseball and the National Basketball Association.

2 World Records Tumble

ATHLETICS Two indoor world records fell in the space of seven minutes at an international athletics meet in Stockholm on Thursday.

First, Nicole Humbert of Germany broke the women's pole-vault record when she cleared 4.56 meters, bettering the previous mark of 4.55 meters set by Emma George of Australia in Adelaide last March.

Then Maria Mutola of Mozambique broke her own record in the 1,000 meters when she clocked 2 minutes, 30.96 seconds. That beat the time of 2:31:23 she set three years ago to the day at the same meet in Stockholm.

Mutola said, "I feel good, it's fantastic, but my legs are hurt-

IOC Member Fights Back

OLYMPICS Phil Coles, a member of the International Olympic Committee and a vice president of the Sydney bid, said Thursday that he planned legal action against the Salt Lake Organizing Committee for the 2002 Games after it made claims that he had behaved unethically. Coles has denied that a 1995 visit to a Utah ski resort was improper. The organizing committee said it would produce air-travel vouchers, courtesy notes and lodging reservations as evidence that bid supporters had lavished favors on Coles.

WORLD ROUNDUP 6 Red Cards And Plenty Of Fireworks As Cup Opens

RIO DE JANEÍRO - South America's Libertadores Cup began in earnest with a flurry of players being sent off and a firework almost causing the suspension of a game in Argentina.

Adrian Corria scored twice for Universitario of Peru and was shown the red card for the way he celebrated the 2-1

Wednesday over Sporting Cristal of Peru. He was one of six players sent off.

Jose Luis Chilavert, the goalkeeper for Velez Sarsfield of Argentina, needed treatment after a firework landed by him when his team scored in the 1-1 Group 2 draw with River Plate.

Crowd violence is an issue in Argentina, where the lower divisions have been suspended by a court order because of fan behavior and first division players have gone on strike in national competitions in solidarity.

ENGLAND Tottenham advanced to the last eight of the FA Cup with a 2-0 victory over visiting Leeds in a replay

David Ginola, Tottenham's French winger, carried his team to victory with a 15-minute burst of inspired play early in the second half. Ginola set up the first goal for Darren Anderton with a quick free kick. The Englishman hammered a swerving shot from 30 meters (100 feet), which hit the inside of the post and flew into the goal. Ginola added the second with a volley from 20 meters and twice hit a post after dazzling dribbles.

In other cup replays, Newcastle, last season's losing finalist, triumphed, 1-0, at Blackburn, and Derby came from behind to down first-division Huddersfield, 3-1, at Pride Park.

Louis Saha, a French forward starting in place of the flu-stricken Alan Shearer, fired Newcastle's winner. SPAIN Valencia beat Barcelona, the league leader and cup holder, 4-3, Wednesday to advance to the semifinals of the King's Cup, 7-5, on aggregate.

Two goals by Clandio Lopez and one by Miguel Angel Angulo gave Valencia a three-goal lead at halftime. Rivaldo and Oscar hit back early in the second half, and Gaizka Mendieta scored to steady Valencia. Ronald de Boer finished the scoring with Barcelona's third goal.

NETHERLANDS Igor Korneev had the lone goal as Feyenoord beat RKC Waalwijk, 1-0, to pad its lead in the Dutch league to six points.

12 of Top 20 Seeds Are Beaten in First Round

By Clifton Brown

CARLSBAD, California - One by one, a stunning number of the world's best golfers were rudely dismissed from the premises. Emic Els stood near the clubhouse wearing a wry smile that failed to hide his disappointment. Lee West-wood stalked out of La Costa Resort & Spa in a huff. Colin Montgomerie cleaned out his locker with his head down and spoke in hushed tones about his demise.

And in a poignant scene late Wednesday afternoon, three members of last year's U.S. Ryder Cup team were sitting in the locker room packing their bags: Mark O'Meara, Davis Love III, and Tom Lehman — all first-round losers.

Welcome to the Andersen Consulting Match Play Championship, which began and ended Wednesday for many of the game's marquee attractions. Five of the top 10 seeds were eliminated, and 12 of the top 20, including O'Meara (No. 3), Love (No. 4), Westwood (No. 5), Montgomerie (No. 6) and Els (No. 7). Everyone expected upsets. But hardly anyone expected this many, this quickly.

By nightfall, 18 of the 36 first-round matches had been won by lower-seeded players, leaving the top-seeded survivors in a stronger position. Tiger Woods (No. 1), David Duval (No. 2), Vijay Singh (No. 8), Nick Price (No. 9), and Justin Leonard (No. 10) all managed to advance. Considering the day's unexpected events, all of the winners were relieved.

"I'm not going to lie, I'm happy to have progressed past the first day," said Duval, who won a difficult match over Stephen Leaney, 2 and 1 - or 2 holes ahead with one to play. "You are facing a week where you could be beat very easily. When you put No. 64 next to a player and No. 1 next to another, it visually creates a wider gap than there actually is. In this type of format, you can easily get ousted."

It was lonely and dangerous at the top, as everyone saw the beauty and the beast power-play goal in overtime lifted Los of match play. The first event in the new Angeles to victory in Detroit, snapping World Golf Championship series sent many of the pre-tournament favorites scrambling to make unexpected plane fortune. Three days earlier, he was celebrating an impressive victory, holding off Woods and Love down the stretch. Wednesday, he tried to explain his loss. and prepared to check out of his hotel.

For Els, it was a difficult change of fortune. Three days and in the way and in the way.

"I don't want to take anything away from Paul, because he did what he had to do," said Els. "But I had opportunities and I didn't take them. I didn't play near to the level that I wanted to. I came off such a high last week, but I just wasa't sharp. Mentally, I was awful. I wanted to do well here, and it's disappointing."

With the match even, Els missed a 12-foot putt for birdie at No. 17 that could have put him 1 up. Then at the par 4 No. 18, Els hit a poor tee shot into the rough. followed by a short approach shot and a mediocre wedge shot that landed 15 feet past the pin just off the green. After Azinger lagged his 35-foot (11-meter) putt for birdie to within two feet, Els conceded par to Azinger, leaving El with his 15-foot putt to keep the match alive. But Els barely missed the putt, and Azinger breathed a sigh of relief.

"I thought it was in," Azinger said of Els's final putt. "Neither one of us really played that great. He wasn't on his game, and I was able to slip in there."

At least Els took his match to the last hole. Montgomerie was dominated by Stadler, the 1982 Masters champion, who took obvious pleasure in winning. The Stadler-Montgomerie match became tense on No. 13, when Stadler refused to concede Montgomerie's three-and-a-balf foot putt for par. Montgomerie made the putt, but he was not happy, and Stadler didn't care.

There is no love lost in match play, said Stadler, who was to face John Huston on Thursday. "You've got to make that putt to stay in the match. I'm not soing to give it to him. He can glare all be wants, I wouldn't give it to anybody a else. Doesn't bother me."

The most anticipated opening-round match was not that close, as Woods defeated Nick Faldo, 4 and 3. The most bizarre moment of that match occurred on No. 14, when a cellular phone rang as Faldo was in his downswing on his tee Bradley, 4 and 2. Love was defeated by shot. Faldo flinched, and his pop-up shot Steve Pate, I up (meaning the match was decided on the last hole). Westwood suffered a stunning 3-and-2 loss to Eduardo Romero of Argentina, a player who was without a wiregroup at the Even who was a wiregroup at the Even who was a wiregroup at the Even who was a wiregroup and the samply did not play well eaough to the Lakers signed the eccentric rebound-ing star, they dismissed Del Harris in his fifth season as their head coach.

Rodman Comes and Harris Goes

On Rebounder's First Day With Team, Lakers Give Up on Coach

The coaching change was not sur-prising, especially because Harris had a reputation for being too easy on his balayers.

Last season, the Lakers reached the Western Conference finals, where they were swept by the Utah Jazz. With the demise of the Chicago Bulls, the Lakers were expected to be championship contenders in this lockout-shortened season.

but they are floundering.

Their record is 6-6. In their last three games, all on the road, they lost to the Seattle Supersonics on Sunday, the Denver Nuggets on Monday and the Vanconver Grizzlies on Tuesday. Before Denver played the Lakers, the Nuggets he has been the NBA's leading rehad a 1-8 record. Vancouver had not beaten the Lakers in 12 meetings.

Still, Jerry West, the Lakers' vice president for basketball operations, said "I wouldn't exactly say we were floundering."

West said he was not sure who would replace Harris. He said that Bill Bertka, a longtime assistant, would take over for Thursday night's game against the Los Angeles Clippers in Anaheim, California. West said that he would then choose Kurt Rambis or Larry Drew to be the coach for the rest of the season. Both are Lakers assistant coaches and former sociation, following four seasons with the Houston Rockets and five with the Milwaukee Bucks. At the age of 61, he trol until Antonio McDyess, who has a 556-461 record. He was 224-116 had 24 points before fouling out with the Lakers and had improved their with 4:35 left, and Nick Van Exel,

As recently as Tuesday night, Shaquille O'Neal said that Harris was not at fault for the team's poor play. Predictably, the guard Nick Van Exel, traded after last season from the Lakers to Denver, disagreed. "It's kind of unfortunate that a good guy like Del is blamed for our lack of cohesion, our lack of effort, our lack of energy," O'Neal said. "However, one reason I came here is because of my faith in upper management." Van Exel, who never got along with Harris, called the coach "a cancer on the

He signed a one-year contract with the Lakers. But because they are over the salary cap, they could pay him only the veterans' minimum of $1 million, and because the season was shortened and he has missed so many games he will earn less than $500,000. His debut is schednled for Friday night against the Clippers in Los Angeles.

At a news conference, Harris said that he had been looking forward to coaching Rodman.

A Struggle to Expose an Avant-Garde Talent

By Joan Dupont

MSTERDAM — Here they are — the erotic draped nudes, the surrealist self-exposures, and haute couture cover-girls floating along-side a hideous death-head collage of Hitler. Strange bedfellows, set in Amsterdam's Ashkenazi syn-agogue complex where the Jewish Historical Museum is exhibiting "A Fetish for Beauty - Avant-Garde Photography of Erwin Blu-menfeld.' The exhibition, created at the Barbican Art Gallery in London by William Ewing (author of a book with the same title), has traveled to Zurich, Lausanne, Berlin and Paris. The Amsterdam opening was special, because this is where the cosmopolitan Blumenfeld, who was born in Berlin and died in Rome, began his life as a photographer.

"I don't think my father ever set foot in a synagogue," said Yorick Blumenfeld, "and he had a lovehate relationship with the Dutch."

The photographer's youngest son contributed pictures from his own collection to the show as did his collection to the show, as did his brother, Henry, and his sister, Lisette. "Each city has focused on another aspect of our father's life. Amsterdam is the most important after Berlin because he spent 17 years here, and you can see that from the start, he was an artist."

for someone who had prostituted himself to fashion and commerce. In that savage tone, Blumenfeld chronicled his years of struggle and ascension in a 1969 autobiography ("Jadis et Daguerre" in French: to be published in English as "Eye to I"). Born in 1897, a turn-of-thecentury child reared in Berlin bourgeois comfort, he was handed his

"The Dutch press blasted him," his son said, pointing to the reviews on exhibit. "They said he had no talent — it rolled right off him." - In 1933, when Hitler came to power, the photographer made a paste-up of the dictator — a skullhead, blood dripping from the eye sockets. (Ten years later, the U.S. Air Force dropped flyers of the collage over Germany.) The rise of Hitler marked the end of his Dutch period, he liquidated the shop and left for Paris, without passport, money, or wife.
